AWAY FROM POLITICS:

Connecticut Boys No Longer After Public Preferment.

Railway and Manufacturing Avenues to Wealth Sought by the Great Majority-Business Instead of Politics.

[Hartford Cor. New York Sun.] "The brightest and ablest of the young men born and brought up in Connecticut do not go into politics," was the complaint recently made by a veteran politician of These most promising fellows either go into business or go west. of them go no further west than New A generation or two ago all the boys were taught before they got out of bib and tucker that they might become president some day, or at least go to congress, and it used to be duly instilled into ought to improve every advantage against the coming time when they would be the wives of presidents or senators or governors. So the brightest and ablest of the lads became early fired with home and school instilled ambition, the White House. To be sure, none of them ever got there, though one was once within a single life of it. But politics got the services of the most intellectual men. There were the Seymours, Thomas H. and Origen; the Baldwins, the Shermans, and Ellsworths; Lafayette S. Foster, who was the model presiding officer of the senate, according to the late Senator Anthony; the profound Ferry, Ralph I. Ingersoli, Charles Chapman, Isaac Fousey, Gideon Welles, and many others whose careers were most honorable to themselves and the state.

But to day mothers and school visitors and the ministers do not stimulate ambi- and the red-hot pan pressed tion by telling the boys that they may go to the White House. The bright boys no longer look to the law as the stepping stone to political preference. The power brand was put on The of wealth and the fascination to be found adopted by here the ves. in getting it honorably are the lessens now taught, and the brilliant young fellows are studying railway problems, the laws of of brands. I once lead a 1 trade, mechanics, and the arts. At Yale a man in Preside county college a series of lectures has just been started in five years agbegan in the problems of railway manage- cows and a brandin ment, the laws natural and political that the development of the railway systems of a dozen men in New Mexico the country have created, and it is announced that nearly all the students are cager to attend these lectures. only at the bar and in politics. "I suppose I am worth half a million, said a man still young, who a few years ago began a political career which was especially promising, and who abruptly quited it for the fascination of money making in connection with the development of the telephone. "I have money enough now," he add d, "but the delight of making it by conquering difficulties, the pleasure of winning is worth more than any political preferment. The son of a successful politician, a young man of great dignant man with brains in his promise, threw down his law books, will be indiscreet enough to packed his coffere decree away, put on pleasant and interesting statem oroughly every detail of the mechanics facture of wool into cloth. To day he is at the head of the breest woolen mills in Yale has matriculated for years closed his law other, sold his library, and applied his brains to a certain line of iron manufacturing, and to-day thanks his stars that he forsook politics. A bright though poor youth, who had saved enough from his visions of congress or some other political honors, cast them aside after graduation, studied practical mechanics and chemistry, and is now the machinist of one of the largest railway corporations in the coun try, with great responsibilities and a corresponding salary. Pickpockets and Fat People, [Exchange.] "It is my opinion," said a gentleman of experience in the matter, "that pickpockets are always very particular in pick ng out their victims, as to what kind of persons they are. I have heard many complaints by corpulent people about this kind of robbery, and I therefore infer that the thief has a partiality for bulky persons. Do you ask why? I am pretty sure it is flagetty and slower in their movements than others of moderate size, and are not very apt to turn around suddenly, or take ich notice of any little rub or jostling equinst them. The hand of the pick pocket, therefore, finds the bag or pocket a fat person to be its best customer and invariably succeeds in making a good bargain. A thin, nervous person, you see, would be constantly on the alert, so that it would be difficult to take anything from him and not disturb him; but the fleshy person falls into passive attitudes and reveries that render him quite unconscious of the soft, sly hand,
